Catherine S. Wright is Counsel in the Litigation practice group and the Equine industry group, focusing primarily on labor and employment litigation. She practices out of the Firm's office in Lexington, Kentucky.

Catherine enjoys being able to devise effective legal solutions and obtain outstanding results for her clients, whether that client is a large corporation or a small local organization. She is well versed in all aspects of employment law, including defense of employment discrimination, retaliation, breach of contract (non-competition and other), wage-hour, intentional tort, ERISA denial of benefits, FMLA, and wrongful discharge claims before federal and state trial courts and appellate courts.

Catherine is also highly experienced defending employers before federal and state agencies, including the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (EEOC), the Kentucky Human Rights Commission and other state fair employment practice (FEP) agencies, and the Department of Labor. She has represented clients in mediation of employment disputes before court-appointed mediators, private mediators, and the American Arbitration Association.

Catherine counsels, advises, and trains management and employees regarding human resources policies and practices, employee handbooks, employment contracts and independent contractor agreements, wage-hour issues, and compliance with numerous employment statutes, including FMLA, ADA, Title VII, ADEA, USERRA, WARN, and FLSA.

Catherine is quite a busy lady in her down time, as she has been married for 27 years and has three children. Catherine enjoys spending her free time at the barn with her daughter and her horse. She relaxes by practicing yoga.

Notable Legal Experience

- Represented a state official in a state court defamation action arising from a personnel action taken in the scope of his employment. In deciding to end the services a leased employee, the state official relied on an email drafted by his human resource official outlining the reasons the leased employee's services were no longer needed. Later, after that email was released under the Open Records Act and information contained in the email published in a Courier-Journal article, the leased employee sued for defamation, tortious interference and wrongful discharge. The case was defended on grounds of qualified official immunity and qualified privilege, among others. State court granted summary judgment on all claims except one. The matter was appealed to the Kentucky Court of Appeals on the issue of qualified official immunity and whether there was a sufficient factual basis to establish malice

- Obtained summary judgment for a state entity in employment litigation involving charges by an employee that she experienced a hostile work environment, retaliation under the Kentucky Civil Rights' Act and retaliation under Kentucky's Whistleblower Act. Employee claimed she was denied a promotion and experienced numerous instances of retaliation, including a transfer of workstation, negative performance reviews, job duty changes and monitoring of her computer. The Kentucky Court of Appeals upheld the summary judgment on all claims except one claim of retaliation; but with no ability to articulate any concrete damages associated with the remaining claim, plaintiff dropped the case. In addition, conducted internal investigation for this state entity relating to use of sick time and defended a fish and wildlife officer from wrongful arrest claim
- Defended multiple suits on behalf of Kentucky school boards, including Wolfe County BOE, Bath County BOE against claims of discrimination, retaliation, first amendment retaliation. Conducted Title IX training for Boyd County BOE; conducted investigation for Fayette County BOE
- Represented employer in a case where the Unemployment Insurance Commission reversed the grant of benefits to an employee stating that the employee could not claim she had no other reasonable alternative but to quit her employment. The employer fully investigated her claims of hostile work environment and found them to be unsubstantiated. However, despite the assurance of enforcement of its well-established non-retaliation policy, the employee would not return to work, claiming she had no choice since her doctor had not released her to return from her FMLA leave. In addition, the Commission found that medical evidence relating to former employee's treatment which occurred prior to the investigation by employer could not be a basis to conclude that the Plaintiff's health condition was the result of her work environment
- In 2017, obtained summary judgment in Madison Circuit Court, Kentucky on behalf of employer on claims of retaliation, disability and gender discrimination after employee claimed that employer failed to accommodate her alleged disability related to a fiberglass allergy and then terminated her employment. Plaintiff also brought claims against two supervisors for retaliation and intentional infliction of emotional distress
- Defeated challenge to employer's use independent contractors alleging misclassification by Kentucky Division of Unemployment Insurance – Tax
